Coping After A Tragedy

DEALING WITH LOSS

Loss from a tragedy or traumatic event can take many forms. It might involve the loss of a loved one, a home, or a pet. It could involve a life-changing injury or illness. It might involve the loss of a sense of safety and security when a crime has been committed. Although our information generally addresses the death of a loved one, your emotional responses and recommendations regarding your health can apply to all categories of traumatic loss.

The first response to your loss may be emotional shock. You may feel numb and as if the situation is unreal. You may have moments of disbelief that your loved one is really dead. Others may want you to quickly “accept reality and move on with your life.” Accepting the reality of your loss is generally a slow and gradual process.

Delay major decisions. Until you have recovered from the initial turmoil following a death or trauma, major decisions should be delayed.

Accept your feelings. You may find yourself experiencing a “roller coaster” of feelings for weeks and months after the loss. Do not try to escape these feelings as they are normal. Going through these emotions is part of the healing process.

Maintain a healthy lifestyle. Try to stay with a quiet and safe routine. Eat regular healthy meals, take proper medications if required, and make sure to get enough exercise and sleep.

NORMAL GRIEF EXPERIENCES

What you may experience physically:

- tightness in muscles or in the throat
- experience of visual or auditory hallucinations of the loved one who has died
- headaches or stomach/intestinal disorders
- periods of nervousness or panic
- inability to sleep, or lack of energy
- lack of desire to eat, or desire to overeat
- inability to concentrate

What you may experience emotionally:

- sadness and/or depression
- may feel a sense of the death being unreal or that it did not actually happen
- forgetfulness
- feeling guilty or angry about things that happened in the relationship with the deceased
- feeling of emptiness or having been cheated
- haunted by thoughts of “if only” things had happened differently
- unexpected anger toward others, God or the deceased
- may cry easily and/or unexpectedly
- fear of what will happen next
- mood swings
- doubts or questions concerning why the death occurred
- may feel uncomfortable around other people
- desire to run away or to become very busy in order to avoid the pain of the loss
- may not want to be alone
- may feel like you’re “going crazy” when overwhelmed with the intensity of feelings

MYTHS ABOUT GRIEF

Myth: Tears are a sign of weakness.

Wrong. Tears are a natural way to release intense feelings. There is no shame in showing how you feel.

Myth: Children should be sheltered from grief.

Not true. Children need to grieve. Tell them about the loss in an honest, loving way.

Grief is a natural reaction to any important change or loss. Grief is a healthy human response to situations such as: the death of a loved one, separation or divorce, miscarriage, injury or disability, the loss of a job, the loss of a pet or property, or children leaving the home.

TIME

You need time alone and time with others you trust, and who will listen when you need to talk. It can take months or years to feel and understand the feelings that go along with loss.

REST

Relaxation, Exercise, Nourishment, and Diversion—You may need extra amounts of self-care. Hot baths, afternoon naps, a trip, helping others...any of these may give you a lift. Grief is an emotionally exhausting process. You need to replenish yourself. Follow what feels healing to you and that which connects you to the people and things you love.

SECURITY

Try to reduce or find help for financial or other stresses in your life. Allow yourself to be close to those you trust. Getting back into a routine helps. You need to allow yourself to do things at your own pace.

HOPE

You may find hope and comfort from those who have experienced a similar loss. Knowing which things helped them, and realizing that they have discovered that time does help, may give you hope that your grief will someday be less raw and painful.

CARING

Try to allow yourself to accept the expressions of caring from others, even though they may be uneasy and awkward. Helping a friend or a relative also suffering the same loss may bring a feeling of closeness with that person.

GOALS

For a while, it will seem that much of life is without meaning. At times like these, small goals are helpful. Something to look forward to such as: playing golf with a friend next week, a movie tomorrow night, a trip next month – helps you get through the immediate future. At first, do not be surprised if your enjoyment for these activities is not the same. This is normal. As time passes, you may need to work on some long-range goals to give some structure and direction to your life. You may need guidance or counseling for help with this.

SMALL PLEASURES

Do not underestimate the healing effects of small pleasures. Sunsets, a walk in the woods, a favorite food; all are small steps toward regaining your pleasures in life itself.

RESOLVING GRIEF

Accept the feelings you are having as normal reactions. You are not “difficult.” You are reacting normally to a “difficult” event. Be patient with yourself. It takes time to recover emotionally from a traumatic event.

Accept the fact that you have been a victim, and accept the feelings that result. Remember, others may not validate your feelings. In fact, they may minimize your experience by saying things like, “You were only a witness,” or “You were really lucky,” or “It’s been two weeks. Why are you still bothered?”

Combat any guilt you may have by:

- Accepting your sense of guilt as normal.
- Talking to others about your role and their role during the event; you are probably not alone in your reaction to this event.
- Realizing you were a victim yourself and not a trained rescuer.
- Recognizing what you did right.
- Recognizing the extenuating circumstance related to the event, such as the suddenness or the danger.
- Helping others in your family or group.
- Reaching out to support those who are particularly traumatized. Take time to talk and to reminisce.
- Respecting each other’s way of coping. Do not victimize them by judging their individual coping style. Let the “grievors” grieve and the “doers” do.
- Seeking out a bereavement group providing an opportunity to share grief with others who have experienced a similar loss.
- If the healing process becomes too overwhelming, seek professional help.

Coping After A Tragedy

DENIAL

This is a psychological term that means someone will not or cannot accept that their loved one has died. They refuse to discuss it or even think it. This is their mind's way of protecting them from the intense emotional pain of grief over the death. With time and support, the denial will lessen and eventually, it will go away.

SADNESS

When a loved one dies, people usually experience sadness. The sadness over the loss of a loved one can be quite intense. Sadness may come and go, last for short bursts of time, and seem unrelated to their loved one. At this time you may need extra comfort and support from the caring people in life.

ANXIETY

Sometimes, in the chaos that follows a death in the family, people become fearful and children may fear that something bad might happen to them and may wonder whose fault the death was.

It is important to be truthful about the realities of life. You cannot promise that no one else will die. Anxiety may also arise if no one is talking about his or her own feelings. It may seem to some people their loved one may have been forgotten. Times of anxiety may also occur at family holidays, and other important milestones, such as birthdays and anniversaries.

ANGER AND BLAME

Many people whose loved one has died may express anger at the circumstances of the death or toward the doctors and nurses for not saving their loved one. They may be angry at others for not having prevented the death somehow. They may just generally be angry with the world or with God or a higher power for allowing this injustice to happen.

Many times, this anger remains hidden. Some people are reluctant to share it because they may be afraid of other's response. However, the rage and hostility are being felt and it may come out without warning, or in seemingly unrelated ways. Families may need help in figuring out how to deal with this anger. Anger in family members can create unhealthy results such as hurting themselves or other people, etc.

GUILT

A common and often harmful response to the circumstances surrounding a loved one's death is anger directed at themselves which, in turn, produces guilt. This situation stems from many dynamics that existed in the family before the death. There may have been estrangement, mental illness, or issues that cause severe dysfunction to the family unit such as abuse, addiction, alcoholism.

People may begin to believe that they are the ones that should have died; that they do not deserve to enjoy themselves. They may seek out punishment or self-harm or berate themselves for not doing something more to prevent the death. They may even contemplate suicide. Sometimes these feelings last for years. They should be gently encouraged to talk about these feelings. It may also be helpful to seek support from outside the family.

Unresolved guilt turns to bitterness. It is difficult to get rid of bitterness. Talking about the guilt and supporting each other is a powerful way to ease the guilt.

DEPRESSION

Some signs of depression are: changes in sleeping or eating habits; a tendency to keep to themselves; inability to concentrate; increased irritability, decreased energy levels. If you are concerned that you or your loved one may be depressed, contact a physician.

The grief reaction and depression may seem similar. It is recognized that grief may become depression if these responses do not lessen over time.

Some people may feel that they are the only ones who are experiencing grief. They may believe that no one else would know how they are feeling or what they are experiencing. Peer support grief groups are very helpful. Check the resources in your community on the web, if possible.

MYTHS ABOUT GRIEF

*Myth: It's best to avoid discussing a loss with a grieving person.
False. Grieving people are grateful for friends who share memories and talk about the pain created by the loss.*

*Myth: An end to grief means an end to caring about a loved one.
Not at all. Love lasts beyond grief through a commitment to living life fully.*

Grief After Suicide

Someone close to you has died. Your grief is intensified because the death was a suicide. The healing process will be painful and often seem unnaturally slow. Understanding your emotions, as well as learning something about suicide in general, may help ease your grief.

WHY SUICIDE?

Suicide cuts across all gender, age, ethnic, religious, and economic barriers. People of all ages complete suicide; men and women as well as young children, the rich as well as the poor. No one is immune to this tragedy.

Why would anyone willingly hasten or cause his or her own death? Mental health professionals who have been searching for years for an answer to that question generally agree that people who took their own lives felt trapped by what they saw as a hopeless situation. Whatever the reality, whatever the emotional support provided, they felt isolated and cut off from life, friendships, etc. Even if no physical illness was present, suicide victims felt intense pain, anguish, and hopelessness. John Newer, author of After Suicide, says, “He or she probably wasn’t choosing death as much as choosing to end this unbearable pain.”

Were there financial burdens that could not be met? ...marriage or family problems? ...divorce? ...scholastic goals that were not achieved? ...loss of a special friendship? ...the death of a close friend or spouse? A combination of these or other circumstances could have precipitated suicide, or it could have been a response to a physiological depression.

Sometimes there are no apparent causes. No matter how long and hard you search for a reason, sometimes you will not be able to answer the “WHY” that haunts you. Each suicide is individual, regardless of the generalizations about the “whys;” and there may be no way you will completely understand the suicide victim’s thought process.

As you look for answers and understanding, you also need to cope with your feelings of shock, anger, and guilt. The intensity of your feelings will depend on how close you were to the deceased and the degree of involvement you had with his or her life. As each suicide is individual, so will your reaction, healing, and coping process be unique. The general observations that follow may help you cope with your grief.

INITIAL SHOCK - THIS IS NOT HAPPENING!

Shock is a normal initial reaction to death. You may feel numb for a while, perhaps unable to follow your usual daily routine. This shock can be healthy, protecting you from the initial pain of the loss, and it may help you get through funeral arrangements and services. It may last a few days or go on for several weeks. Take some time to be alone, if that is what you want, but it is also important to be with other people and return to your normal routine.

After the initial shock you may feel angry, guilty, and of course, sad. These feelings may overwhelm you all at once, and immediately; or they may surface in the weeks, months, and years ahead. You may handle them well initially only to have them return for no apparent reason. These feelings, and the helplessness that comes with them, will pass. Try to understand and accept what you are feeling. It is OK, it is healthy, and it is all part of the healing and coping process.

ANGER - WHY AM I SO ANGRY?

As a relative or loved one coping with a suicide death, you may experience anger, often directed at the deceased – “How could he do this to me?” If the deceased was receiving psychiatric or medical care you may ask, “Why didn’t THEY prevent it? You may find yourself questioning your faith for “allowing this to happen.” The anger may be self-directed – “What could I have done?” or “Why wasn’t I there?”

Do not try to deny or hide this anger. It is a natural consequence of the hurt and rejection you feel. If you deny your anger, it will eventually come out in other, possibly more destructive, ways and it will prolong the healing process. You need to find someone you can talk to about this feeling – perhaps a close friend or your clergyman. You may need to release your anger physically; take long brisk walks or any exercise that is reasonable for your physical capabilities.

Your anger with the deceased is normal when the manner of death is suicide. The deceased has thrown your emotions into turmoil, and caused pain for you and others you care about.

Anger with the medical or mental health profession can occur if the suicide victim was receiving treatment or therapy. Though you may have had experience with someone unable to help, the professionals are dedicated and well trained, providing help for many people. These professionals will be the first to recognize that your anger is a valid emotion.

GUILT - IF ONLY I HAD DONE SOMETHING MORE

Perhaps the most intense anger you may experience will be the way you feel about yourself. This anger is closely linked with feelings of guilt. “But I just talked with him!” “Why didn’t I listen?” “If only... I should have...” etc. You will think of a lot of others.

If the deceased was someone with whom you had regular close contact, your guilt may be impossibly intense. If the death came as a complete surprise, you may be desperately searching for reasons. Often times but not always a person who completes suicide has usually given out some clues, and as you look back on the last few months (or years) maybe you can now see some hints you missed earlier. You will wish you had recognized the problem early enough to do something about it.

Perhaps you were aware of the deceased’s suicidal feelings and you did try to help. You may have thought you had because in the time preceding the death you noticed he or she seemed to be feeling a lot better and you relaxed your concern. You need to know it is not uncommon for a suicidal person to feel better once the decision to die has been made. The problem has not been resolved, but the victim has found an answer – suicide.

As you are trying to cope with your guilt feelings, try not to criticize yourself too harshly for your behavior toward the victim while he/she was alive. Are you now wishing you could have found the right solutions or offered more support? Thoughts like “I shouldn’t have gone to the movie,” or “I should have been there,” may constantly be running through your head. If you had stayed home, or if you had been with him, the suicide could and possibly would have happened at another time. If you feel your presence at a particular time could have prevented the suicide, you are assuming too much. Of course we all like to think we can help our troubled friends and families, and we do try; but the person determined to complete suicide is likely to accomplish it.

Some people believe an individual has a right to end his life. The term ‘rational suicide’ is used to describe a suicide that has been thought about, and planned, perhaps as a way of dealing with a painful terminal illness. This is an area of controversy; whether you accept it or not, what you do need to think about is that the suicide was an individual decision – rational or not. It was his/her choice, not yours. You may accept this intellectually long before your emotions accept it.

What value does your anger or guilt have in the healing process and beyond? Rather than letting the hurt isolate you, share your time and understanding with someone else who is hurting. You can provide friendship and support, get involved with others, actively support suicide prevention services in your area, or any worthwhile cause or issue that means something to you.

RELIEF - I’M ALMOST GLAD IT’S OVER

If you were closely involved with the deceased, perhaps his/her pain and suffering had become an emotional drain for you. You may have felt unfairly burdened, or exhausted from being involved with an intense situation. Now you may be feeling a sense of relief that you do not have to worry anymore, or perhaps relief that the deceased’s pain has finally ended. A sense of relief when a difficult situation ends is normal. When the ‘end’ is an unhappy one, the relief can still be there, but now it is colored with guilt. Remember, do not expect perfection of yourself; accept your relief and do not let it grow to inappropriate guilt. The late psychiatrist, Dr. Theodore Reik, said, “One can feel sorry for something without feeling guilty.” Remember, too, that the suicide victim saw death as the only relief possible at that particular time.

*Death leaves a heartache
No one can heal;
Love leaves a memory
No one can steal.*

- Irish Proverb

Grief After Suicide

STIGMA - WHAT DO I TELL PEOPLE?

The stigma or shame you may think others associate with suicide stems in part from its historical and religious interpretations. Early Roman and English laws established suicide as a crime because it was thought a person ended his life to avoid paying taxes. Though the Bible itself contains no prohibition against suicide, the early Christian church equated suicide with murder. Today very few laws exist that equate suicide with crime, and those few are rarely invoked.

If your friends seem uncomfortable talking about the death or even being with you, it is most likely the type of discomfort felt when facing death of any kind or a reaction to your discomfort. If you are not comfortable relating the circumstances to others, you do not have to. Your close friends will already know. Let others simply respond to the death of your loved one. You do not need to share the complete story with those not close to you any more than you would share all the details of a recent surgery with them.

However, it is very important that you do confront the word 'suicide.' Practice thinking, hearing, and saying it. Do not try to do this alone; you need someone or several people with whom you can share your feelings. For a few days – possibly a week or two – you may want to isolate yourself and take time to recover by yourself; but do not cut yourself off for too long. Let friends and relatives help you. No one will have any magic answers for you. No one will be able to make you hurt less. The healing and coping process requires that you talk about your feelings – about all the sadness, anger, hurt, and guilt you are carrying around inside you. Friends may provide all the emotional support you need or you may want to join a mutual support group and meet with others who have experienced the suicide of a loved one. The suicide hotline in your area may be able to offer you some understanding and support over the telephone. Often these hotlines are answered 24 hours a day by people specially trained to help you through the rough spots. They will understand your feelings and help you find ways to work things out.

If you need some professional counseling, your doctor, clergyman, or your mental health association can help you find appropriate services. Remember, you may be blaming yourself in some way but there are people who will share your sorrow and help you see things more clearly.

Suicide may occur more than once within a family. In a family, or even among friends, suicide may establish a destructive model or a behavior to imitate. Thoughts of your own suicide are not an uncommon reaction to the suicide of someone you love and may surface immediately, or years later. A fleeting thought now and then should not cause alarm, but extended depression and continuing suicidal thoughts need immediate attention. Do not hesitate to seek out professional help if your problems seem more than you can handle alone.

LOOKING AHEAD

Your grief and sadness will eventually subside, and you will be able to pick up the pieces of your life and rebuild.

There will be times, however, when these feelings will surface very strongly. Holidays or other special times may renew your sadness. Especially for the first year, you will need to decide if you want to maintain traditions you shared with the deceased or if you want new settings and activities to ease painful memories.

On the anniversary of the death, you may want to be alone, attend church, or observe the day in a manner that means something special to you. You may prefer to spend that time with someone close to you or make plans for a family gathering. You cannot avoid these periods of sadness, but whenever possible, try to plan ahead so that they will not be overwhelming. Sometimes your loneliness and sadness may come back for no special reason; be prepared to face this also. Ask for help from friends or a counseling service, if you need it. You cannot expect to forget, but you will be able to cope.

Professional help is a must if anyone you know has attempted suicide or considered taking his own life. Contact a counseling service in your area, a family doctor or call a suicide/crisis hotline for information and referrals.

Helping Teenagers Cope with Grief

Each year thousands of teenagers experience the death of someone they love. When a parent, sibling, friend or relative dies, teens feel the overwhelming loss of someone who helped shape his or her fragile self-identities. These feelings about death become a part of their lives forever.

Caring adults, whether parents, teachers or friends, can help teens during this time. If adults are open, honest and loving, experiencing the loss of someone loved can be a chance for young people to learn about both the joy and pain that comes from caring deeply for others.

TEEN YEARS CAN BE NATURALLY DIFFICULT

Teens are no longer children, nor adults. With the exception of infancy, no developmental period is so filled with change as adolescence. Leaving the security of children, the adolescent begins the process of separation from parents. The death of a parent or sibling, then, can be a particularly devastating experience during this already difficult period.

In addition to being confronted with the death of a loved one, bereaved teens already face psychological, physiological and academic pressures in their everyday lives. While teens may begin to look like “men” or “women” they will still need consistent and compassionate support as they do the work of mourning, because physical development does not always equal emotional maturity.

How adults respond when a loved one dies has a major effect on the way teens react to the death. Sometimes adults do not want to talk about the death, in order to spare young people some of the pain and sadness. However reality is very simple: teens grieve anyway.

Teens often need caring adults to confirm that it is ok to be sad and to feel a multitude of emotions when someone they love dies. They also usually need help understanding that the hurt they feel now will not last forever. When ignored, teens may suffer more from feeling isolated than from the actual death itself. Worse yet, they feel all alone in grief.

LACK OF SUPPORT

Many adults who lack understanding of their experience, discourage teens from sharing their grief. Bereaved teens give out all kinds of signs that they are struggling with the complex feelings, yet are often pressured to act as though they are doing better than they really are.

When a parent dies, many teens are told to “be strong” and “carry on” for the surviving parent. They may not know if they will survive themselves, let alone be able to support someone else. Obviously, these kinds of conflicts hinder the “work of mourning.”

Many people assume that adolescents have supportive friends and family who will be continually available to them. In reality, this may not be true at all. The lack of available support often relates to the social expectations placed on the teen.

Sometimes we assume that teenagers will find comfort from their peers. When it comes to death, it may not be true. It seems that unless friends have experienced grief themselves, they project their own feeling of helplessness by ignoring the subject of loss, altogether.

RELATIONSHIP CONFLICTS MAY EXIST

As teens strive for their independence, relationship conflicts with family members often occur. A normal, though trying way, in which teens separate from their parents is by going through a period of devaluation.

If a parent dies while the adolescent is emotionally and physically pushing the parent away, there is often a sense of guilt and “unfinished business.” While the need to create distance is normal, we can easily see how this complicates the experience of mourning.

SIGNS A TEEN MAY NEED EXTRA HELP

There are many reasons why healthy grieving can be especially difficult for teenagers. Some grieving teens may even behave in ways that seem inappropriate or frightening. Be on the watch for:

- Symptoms of chronic depression, sleeping difficulties, restlessness and low self esteem
- Academic failure or indifference to school-related activities
- Deterioration of relationships with family and friends
- Risk-taking behaviors, such as drug and alcohol abuse, fighting and sexual experimentation
- Denying pain while at the same time acting overly strong or mature

To help a teen who is having a particularly hard time with his or her loss, explore the full spectrum of helping services in your community. School counselors, church groups and private therapists are appropriate resources for some young people, while others may just need a little more time and attention from caring adults like you.

UNDERSTANDING THE IMPORTANCE OF THE LOSS

Remember that the death of a loved one is a shattering experience for an adolescent. The teen's life is under reconstruction due to this death. Consider the significance of the loss and be gentle and compassionate in all of your helping efforts.

Grief is complex. It will vary from teen to teen. Caring adults need to communicate to children that this feeling is not one to be ashamed of or hide. Instead, grief is a natural expression of love for the person who died.

For caring adults, the challenge is clear: teenagers do not choose between grieving and not grieving. Adults, on the other hand, do have a choice: to help or not to help teens cope with grief.

With love and understanding, adults can support teens through this vulnerable time and help make the experience a valuable part of a teen's personal growth and development.

Informing A Child of a Death

You are probably reading this page because there is a crisis in your family, and you need quick information about what to say to a child regarding a loved one who has died. This article provides quick and simple guidelines.

If you are the child's primary caregiver, evaluate your own emotional state regarding the death. Would it be better to have someone with you when your child is informed? If so, reach out to family, a friend, or a clergyperson.

- Keep it simple. Use "died," not "He/She is sleeping or passed away." For example, "Colin, there was an accident at work today. Daddy was working on the 5th floor when a guardrail broke and he fell down to the ground. The fall was so far and so hard that he died."
- Allow your child to express raw feelings freely or ask questions.
- Answer questions honestly and simply.
- ◆ What does dead mean? Dead means your body has stopped working. It is not breathing; it doesn't need to eat or sleep.
- ◆ What is cremation? The dead body is placed in a room with a high temperature that turns the body into ashes (cremains). These ashes can be put in a special container called an urn. They can also be scattered in a special location.
- ◆ Why is his/her body cold or hard? The body is warm when it is working correctly. The person has died so the body doesn't need to stay warm anymore.
- ◆ Why did my loved one die? That is a hard question to answer, just say honestly- "I don't know." If you do know, state it in simple terms "Grandpa had been very sick for a long time." "John was hit by a car."
- ◆ Will this happen to you? (addressed to parent/guardian) "I am hoping to live a long time; we just don't know when we will die."
- ◆ Who will take care of me if this happens to you? Tell them that a relative or a friend will take care of them, but you are hoping to live a long time.

- Do not go into details unless asked. Offer only as much detailed information as requested by the child.
- If the death was due to a violent crime, explain how the child will remain safe.
- If your loved one is suitable for viewing, allow the child to see the loved one if requested and possible. Prepare the child for what he or she will see.
- Tell your child what will happen in the next few days.
- Give your child choices in what to do. Some children want to go to school the day of the death. Familiar routines are comforting. Inform the school of the death before your child returns.
- Reassure your child that he or she will be cared for, and explain the plan.

For more information please visit childgrief.org.

WORDS THAT CAN HELP

Offering support to a grieving child can begin with a simple statement or open-ended question. Here are some conversation starters:

- I'm sorry your mom/dad/sister died.
- What was your dad/mom/brother like?
- Tell me about your _____.
- What was his favorite food?
- What do you miss the most?
- What is the hardest part for you?
- What is the hardest time of day for you?
- I cannot know how you feel, but I remember how I felt when my _____ died.
- I care about you.
- I care about how you are feeling.
- Would you like to talk about it?
- I'm thinking about you especially today because I'm aware that today is your mother's birthday (anniversary of the death, your birthday, etc).
- I'm here to listen if you want to talk, or we can just spend time together if you don't want to talk.
- When is your recital (game, rehearsal, etc.)?
- Would it be okay if I stop by?

WORDS THAT CAN HURT

The following are a few of the potentially harmful comments that are often offered to children grieving the loss of a parent:

- I know just how you feel.
- I know just how you feel...my dog died last year.
- You'll get over it.
- It will be okay.
- Don't think about it.
- Don't cry.
- You drove your father to drink.
- If only you had _____.
- Tears won't bring her back.
- Be strong.
- Forget about it.
- You are the man/woman of the house now.
- You should feel...(proud, relieved, happy, sad, etc.)

HELPING CHILDREN SURVIVE THE LOSS OF A LOVED ONE

- Children have the same emotional needs as adults, but sometimes these needs are ignored or taken lightly. Many times adults are too full of grief to reach out to their children.
- Be honest with children. Give them clean, correct facts about the death in a compassionate and loving way.
- Be careful not to over-explain.
- Listen carefully to their questions and answer them truthfully. Remain consistent in your truthful answers about the death.
- Talk about the dead family member.
- Tell your children about the death, even the young ones.
- Encourage your children to share their grief with you and with trusted friends.
- You can help them grieve by letting them see you cry, and by crying with them. Show them that crying is an acceptable and natural release for grief.
- Be aware of children's possible guilt feelings. Assure them that the death was not their fault.

THINGS FOR ADULTS TO DO WITH CHILDREN

Play: Talk about what happened using stuffed animals, dolls, phones. Run, jump, exercise to get stored-up energy out.

Art: Draw, paint, play with clay, take pictures, make a collage.

Music: Listen to music, write and play songs.

Storytelling/Reading: Read or share stories about the person who died, read stories/books together, or create your own life story.

Writing: Write a letter to the person who died, write a letter from a person who died to you, write in a feelings journal, write poems about feelings or memories, make a goodbye card.

Creative Expression: Build a memorial display or memorial garden, create a scrapbook of favorite memories, make something to leave at the graveside, work on a memories quilt together, start a memory book.

When the child shows you something they have made or done, encourage them to tell you more about it. For example, "I see you drew a picture. Tell me more about it. What does this mean to you?"

Allow the child to be your teacher, having a dialogue with the child about his/her expressions of grief allows healing to occur.

When a Baby Dies

The death of a baby is one of life's most devastating experiences. It leaves parents feeling shocked, disoriented and heartbroken. This grief reaction is a powerful and complex emotional response to the loss of a beloved child. Often, friends and loved ones may have difficulty understanding the depth of the sorrow or the length of time needed to deal with the pain. For this reason, grieving can be very lonely.

RIGHTS OF PARENTS WHEN A BABY DIES

- To be given the opportunity to see, hold and touch the baby after death within reason following permission from the proper authorities.
- To be given as many mementos as possible, e.g. crib, card, baby bands, other photos, lock of hair, feet/handprints and records of weight and length.
- To observe cultural and religious practices.
- To be with each other throughout hospitalization as much as possible.
- To have information presented in terminology understandable to the parents regarding the baby's status and cause of death, including autopsy, pathology reports and medical records.
- To plan a farewell ritual, burial or cremation in compliance with local and state regulation, and according to personal beliefs, religious or cultural tradition.
- To be provided with information on support resources, which assist in the healing process, e.g. support groups, counseling, reading material and perinatal loss newsletters.

PLANNING YOUR CHILD'S SERVICE

During this difficult time we wish to offer you the following information, designed to offer gentle suggestions and a starting point to help plan your precious child's good-bye. While this information is published by a SIDS organization we feel you may find many of the suggestions appropriate regardless of the age or cause of death of your child.

Have you considered...

- Taking your time; do not be rushed.
- Planning a service that meets your needs. Do not be restricted by what others may think.
- Delaying the service until both the mother and father can be present.
- With twins, if one twin has died and the other is expected to die delaying the service to facilitate having both twins buried together.

- Even if it has been decided you do not wish to see and/or hold your child you can change your mind with permission from the proper authorities.
- A simple private graveside service and a public service at a later date when you have had more time to plan.
- That if the child's body is to be given for scientific study or cremated, a service may still be possible.
- Requesting a handprint or footprint.
- Requesting a lock of hair.
- Finding out if there are visitation hours or limitations as to when you can be with your child prior to the service.
- Burying the child with family pictures, a favorite toy or in favorite clothing; some families keep a duplicate for themselves.
- Having photos taken of the child alone or with family members.
- That your own religion may have specific services designed for children or young people.
- Writing a letter to your child and including it in the casket.
- Allowing each sibling select something of the child's to place in the casket.
- Dressing your child, combing the child's hair or wrapping your child in a blanket.
- Holding and rocking your child.
- In lieu of flowers: donations to buy books for the child's school, establish a scholarship, donate to organizations.
- If you are not pleased with the positioning or appearance of your child ask for changes.
- That if you do not have a clergy, either a family member or friend can direct the service.
- Having the baby placed in a cradle, bassinet or simply held by you during visitation/or service.
- Lighting a special candle which can then be re-lit at family functions to include the child's presence.
- Having literature displayed which explains the cause of death, donation envelopes or suggestions on how friends and family members can be of the most support.
- How will you have your child called (name, nickname) during the service.
- Having a photograph of the child on display.
- That even if your child's other siblings wish to attend the service it is a good idea to have someone they feel comfortable with be available in case they choose to or need to leave during the service.

- Saving a flower from the service and placing it in the baby's book.
- Designing the memorial folder yourself (picture of child, favorite verse) or ask the funeral director to see his catalog.
- Video or audio recording your child's service.
- Services do not have to be at the funeral home; other options are churches, private homes and parks.
- Burying your child with another deceased family member; having them share a gravesite can be comforting.
- If you decide to cremate your child you may wish to keep the ashes, scatter them, place them in a urn, or bury them in a cemetery or at home, remember to seek appropriate restrictions.
- Asking if you can participate in the closing of the gravesite.
- That you do not have to buy a marker right away, but check about any restrictions for the burial site.
- Designing the headstone yourself (poem, infant's picture, art work), or many stonemasons have examples of headstones.

IN THE DAYS AND MONTHS THAT FOLLOW

Have you considered...

- Seeking out a peer or professional support group.
- That there is not any hurry in deciding what to do with the personal belongings of your child.
- Donating your child's toys to a hospital or church nursery.
- Asking for a copy of the autopsy report.
- Putting together a memory box to store pictures and cards.

GRANDPARENT GRIEF: A TWO-TINED FORK

Grandparents' grief is like a fork with two tines--one tine represents the loss of a grandchild and the other represents the pain of seeing your child suffer. Therefore, you have two tasks. The first is to work through your own grief and the other is to feel helpful to your bereaved child. There may be two parts, but you actually deal with them at the same time.

Grief is the normal reaction to loss. Actually, we experience grief throughout our lives. A pet dies. A friend moves away. Our children go off to college. We lose a job. We grieve these losses, but we do not always realize this is what we are doing. With a grandchild's death, we face one of life's most painful griefs.

The danger of listing the manifestations of grief is that we tend to think we should fit into certain patterns. If we do not experience them like "the book" says, we think that something is wrong with us. Do not fall into that trap. Many things determine how you grieve. We are all individuals in our personalities, experiences, ways of coping, and grief timetables. Your feelings will be the same as many other grandparents. At the same time, your grief and feelings will be uniquely and singularly yours.

You may also experience some of the following as well:

- Sleep problems
- Appetite
- Constant Talk
- Constant Thoughts
- Inability to Concentrate

Physical problems such as weakness, fatigue, infections, colds, stomach problems, increased blood pressure, headaches, are common to bereaved grandparents. Any chronic physical ailments you already have can be aggravated now. It is important to have a check-up but be sure your physician knows you are grieving and understands that grief is normal. It is a part of life, not a pathological or emotional illness. Unfortunately, many doctors still see grief as "sick" and will prescribe medication for "nerves." Hopefully, your doctor can prescribe medication that will lessen your physical problems. Please be extremely careful of allowing any doctor to try to alleviate the stress of your grief with mind or mood-altering chemicals.

Your reaction to your grandchild's death is likely to be different from your spouse or the other set of grandparents. Do not compare yourself with any one else or think something is wrong with you if you grieve differently. Many things in our personalities, cultures, religions, and our lives contribute to how we grieve. We hope you take the suggestions here and allow yourself to openly express your emotions. It is not easy to change old patterns, but try. You cannot avoid or bury grief. You must go through it. Sadness must be expressed through tears. Anger and guilt must be talked out and looked at honestly. Lean into the pain and allow yourself to experience it. In other words, allow yourself to be miserable when you need to be. This is what working through grief means.

Practical Matters When Death Occurs

FINAL DETAILS

The death of a loved one is a very difficult time. Yet even during this period of grief and emotional readjustment, important financial arrangements must be made. Some attention may have been focused on these items prior to a death. We hope the following information will help to guide you through the decisions and actions which need to be taken following a death.

COLLECTING PAPERWORK

The first step is to collect the necessary papers in order to file for various benefits and to finalize the estate.

COPIES OF THE DEATH AND MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE

You will need to give copies of the death certificate to many of the offices and agencies you contact. You can purchase certified copies of the death certificate through your funeral director or directly from the San Diego County Health & Human Services Agency. Call 619-692-5733 or online at <https://arcc.sdcounty.ca.gov/pages/birthdeath-certificates.aspx> (fee required). You may save money by using a photocopy when possible, but many companies will require a certified copy. For most circumstances, 3-5 copies are sufficient, but more can be ordered at a later date.

Marriage certificates are needed if the spouse of the deceased will be applying for benefits. Copies are available at the Office of the County Clerk where the marriage license was issued. In San Diego County, call 619.237.0502 (fee required) or visit the website above. Birth certificates for dependent children can also be obtained within this office.

COPY OF A CERTIFICATE OF HONORABLE DISCHARGE

A copy of a certificate of honorable (or other than dishonorable) discharge will be needed if the deceased was a veteran.

If you cannot find a copy of the discharge, write to:

National Personnel Records Center Military Records
1 Archives Drive
St Louis, MO 63138
Phone: 314-801-0800

THE WILL OR LIVING TRUST

If a valid will has been prepared, try to locate it. Check with the lawyer, family, and friends of the deceased who might know where the will is kept. It may be stored in a safe deposit box, which is sealed at the time of death in some states. (See the section on safe deposit boxes.)

If the deceased did not have a will, this is referred to as dying “intestate.” In this case, the estate, including property and assets belonging to the deceased, will be disbursed according to state law. Contact attorney for further information.

INCOME TAXES

The federal and state income tax returns of the deceased are due for the year of death. The tax returns are due on the normal filing date of the following year, unless an extension is requested. This will serve as notice of death to the IRS. You may want to leave the bank account open with the decedent’s name on it if there will be a refund due.

The spouse of the deceased may file jointly for the year of death. A spouse with dependent children may file jointly for two additional years. The IRS offers a booklet, publication #a559, “Information for Survivors, Executors and Administrators,” which may be helpful. You can obtain this booklet by contacting your local IRS office, call San Marcos: (760) 736-7355 San Diego: (619) 321-5950 or online at <https://www.irs.gov>

You should consider consulting an accountant regarding these matters.

EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

If the deceased was employed at the time of death, you should contact the employer regarding any benefits for the survivors. The employer may have provided life, health or accident insurance, which yield payments. The deceased may be due a final paycheck for vacation or sick leave. If the death was work-related, there may be worker’s compensation benefits.

You should contact all past employers, including federal, state, or local government, to determine if the survivors of the deceased are entitled to any payments from a pension plan.

Also, check with the employer to see if the deceased belonged to a union or professional organization. These groups may offer death benefits for their members.

If the deceased was already retired and received a pension, you should check with the employer to determine if survivors will continue to receive a pension payment.

A LIST OF ALL PROPERTY

This can include all real estate, stocks, bonds, savings accounts and personal property of the deceased. Land titles, stock certificates and other financial papers may be stored in a safe deposit box or other secure place.

INSURANCE POLICIES

The deceased may have had several types of insurance policies. Insurance documents may be stored in a safe deposit box or with the personal belongings of the deceased. These could include:

Life Insurance | Locate the policy and notify the company of the decedent's death. Find out from the company what kind of documents they need in order to issue a check. Most companies will need the original policy and a certified copy of the death certificate. Send the original policy by certified mail and make a copy of the policy before sending it. If you cannot locate the policy, but suspect there is one in existence, visit the American Council of Life Insurers at www.acli.com and search for "Missing Policies." When filling out the claim form, you should have the following information available:

- The policy number(s)
- The full name and address of the deceased
- His/her date, place of birth, and the source of birth information (i.e. birth certificate, etc.)
- His/her last occupation and last date worked
- Date, place and cause of death
- Claimant's name, age, address, and social security number
- Certified copy of the death certificate

Homeowner's Insurance/Mortgage or Loan Insurance | Make sure that there is sufficient coverage. If the property will be vacant, consider adding vandalism coverage. If the property is sold or transferred to a new owner the policy should be cancelled.

Auto Insurance | Let the auto insurance company know of the decedent's death. If you are a surviving spouse, check about continuing coverage for yourself.

Credit Card Insurance (See Credit Card section)

Various Types of Insurance Provided by The Employer of The Deceased | The proceeds from an insurance policy can generally be paid directly to the named beneficiary. These claims are usually processed quickly and can be an important source of money for the survivors.

Consider filing claims for insurance policies as soon as possible, especially if finances are a concern. You should consider consulting a lawyer or financial advisor concerning these matters.

REVIEW YOUR OWN INSURANCE NEEDS

Often, these needs can change after the death of a family member or other loved one. Good organization of your own insurance information can aid survivors at the time this is needed.

CREDIT CARDS

Find out if the decedent had credit card insurance. If so, the balance may be paid off. You may want to destroy all the decedent's credit cards. Credit cards, which were held exclusively in the name of the deceased, should be cancelled. The estate should pay any other payments due on these credit cards.

In the case of a spouse, you may have credit cards in both names, or you may have used cards that list only the name of the deceased. In this situation, you may want to try to make payments in order to keep your own good credit rating. You should begin to notify the credit card companies that your spouse is deceased, and that the card should list your name only. Some credit cards and charge accounts include a life insurance policy. They may want a certified copy of the death certificate. Some people, particularly widows, may experience difficulties in getting a new card if they have not established their own credit. When applying for a card, be sure to inform the lender about credit cards you shared with your spouse, even if your name was not listed. They may also be able to assist you in determining any outstanding obligations of the deceased.

SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS

Social Security numbers of the deceased, the spouse and any dependent children will be needed. The funeral director will need the social security number for the death certificate.

LOST, ABANDONED, OR UNCLAIMED PROPERTY

Prior to death, the decedent may have lost or forgotten about bank or brokerage accounts. California accounts that are unclaimed for more than three years are turned over to the Unclaimed Property Fund of California Comptroller. If you suspect the decedent had funds turned over to the State Controller, call 800-992-4647 or write to the Division of Collections, Bureau of Unclaimed Property, P.O. Box 942850, Sacramento, CA 94250-5873. www.sco.ca.gov

Practical Matters When Death Occurs

MEDI-CAL MEDICARE

If the decedent was receiving Medi-Cal benefits, you must notify the Director of Health Services within 90 days of the death. If you want to find out which costs are covered, get the publication “Medicare and You” from the Medicare website at www.medicare.com.

BENEFICIARIES

If the decedent was named beneficiary on your life insurance, retirement plans, or bank accounts, then you should contact the various institutions to change the beneficiary.

FINANCIAL RECORDS & FINANCIAL DOCUMENTS

It would be of benefit if the decedent might have prepared a comprehensive list of all accounts and assets. Usually such lists are not available but always check to see if one is on hand. Look around the home and do not forget to check the computer.

Locate bank and brokerage statements, passbooks, stock certificates, and insurance. You may want to change over all bank accounts and remove the deceased’s name from those accounts; you may need a copy of the death certificate to do this. Consider contacting all sources of retirement funds that the deceased was receiving and apply for any benefits that are due to you.

REAL PROPERTY DOCUMENTS

Find deeds to all real property. If you cannot find them at home check the safe deposit box. If they are not there, locate the property tax bill and contact the County Recorder to request a copy of the deed. Change the deed on your property and remove the deceased’s name from that deed. This is done at the county seat where the property is located. You will need a certified copy of the death certificate.

Please note nothing contained herein shall be deemed legal advice but rather is a compilation of various considerations following the death of a loved one. We encourage you to seek legal counsel and the advice of a certified public accountant to answer questions about any information contained herein.

CHANGING OWNERSHIP OR TITLE

You may need to transfer ownership or change title on property, or revise documents after a death. Some items to check include:

Insurance policies

For policies held by the spouse of the deceased, or other beneficiaries may need to be changed. For life insurance, you may decide that you no longer need to have the same amount if you do not have dependents. Auto insurance and home insurance may also need revision. In the case of a spouse, the deceased may have covered your medical insurance through work. You may need to purchase your own medical insurance. Check with the employer to see if you can continue with their group health insurance plan, which may be less expensive. Contact the company issuing the policy to make changes, or for more information.

Auto

Before you can transfer the title of a car you need to locate the title and bring it to the DMV with a death certificate. If you cannot find the title, obtain a form Reg 227 (Application for Duplicate Title), which is available at DMV offices or on the web at www.dmv.ca.gov. You may need to change the registration of your vehicle(s). This is done at the Department of Motor Vehicles. This includes cars, trucks, trailers, motor homes, mobile homes, etc. You may use a copy of the Death Certificate for this purpose.

Will

Your will may have passed property on to the deceased, and should be updated. You may want to contact your attorney for assistance.

Bank accounts, stocks, bonds

You may want to call the bank and check on how money will be transferred. You may want to change the title and signature card on the accounts. To change stocks or bond titles, check with your stockbroker. Contact any financial institution where the deceased had a loan and inform them of the death. They will be able to inform you if the loan was covered by a credit life and what needs to be done to file the appropriate claim.

Safe Deposit Box

If the box was rented only in the name of the deceased, it may require a court order to open the box. In order to do this, you will need to be in possession of the key to the safe deposit box, along with a death certificate and proper identification. Call your bank and ask for details.

How Social Security Can Help You When a Family Member Dies

Social Security should be notified as soon as possible when a person dies. In most cases, the funeral director will report the person's death to Social Security. You will need to furnish the funeral director with the deceased's Social Security number so he or she can make the report.

Some of the deceased's family members may be able to receive Social Security benefits if the deceased person worked long enough under Social Security to qualify for benefits. You should get in touch with Social Security as soon as you can to make sure the family receives all of the benefits to which it may be entitled. Please read the following information carefully to learn what benefits may be available.

- A one-time payment of $255 can be paid to the surviving spouse if he or she was living with the deceased; or, if living apart, was receiving certain Social Security benefits on the deceased's record. If there is no surviving spouse, the payment is made to a child who is eligible for benefits on the deceased's record in the month of death.

- Certain family members may be eligible to receive monthly benefits, including:

- A widow or widower age 60 or older (age 50 or older if disabled);
- A widow or widower at any age who is caring for the deceased's child under age 16 or disabled;
- An unmarried child of the deceased who is:
 - ° Younger than age 18 (or up to age 19 if he or she is a full-time student in an elementary or secondary school); or
 - ° Age 18 or older with a disability that began before age 22;
- A stepchild, grandchild, stepgrandchild or adopted child under certain circumstances;
- Parents, age 62 or older, who were dependent on the deceased for at least half of their support; and
- A surviving divorced spouse, under certain circumstances.

If the deceased was receiving Social Security benefits, you must return the benefit received for the month of death or any later months. For example, if the person dies in July, you must return the benefit paid in August. If benefits were paid by direct deposit, contact the bank or other financial institution. Request that any funds received for the month of death or later be returned to Social Security. If the benefits were paid by check, do not cash any checks received for the month in which the person dies or later. Return the checks to Social Security as soon as possible.

However, eligible family members may be able to receive death benefits for the month in which the beneficiary died.

How to be Helpful Following a Tragedy: 10 Things TO DO and NOT TO DO

All of us face dilemmas when something bad happens to someone we know. Many times we inadvertently say the wrong thing and increase the hurt they're feeling. Or, we don't do or say anything for fear that we'll be in the way. Here's a practical list of 10 do's and don'ts when it comes to helping someone who's just experienced a trauma or death of a friend or loved one.

1. DO listen. As a rule, if you're talking more than they are, you're not being helpful.
2. DON'T tell your story. It's not about you. "When my father died..." language isn't helpful. Don't try and relate your pain—that's essentially emotional theft. No matter how similar your story is, it's not theirs. Their experience is different and happening right now. Let the focus be on them.
3. DO send a note. It may seem insignificant to you, but a thoughtful, short, handwritten note can mean the world to someone in a particular kind of hell. Even if it's months after the death, that note will mean a lot.
4. DON'T use platitudes like, "it was God's will," or "She's in God's hands now," or "At least he had a good life," or "You can have other children." Such loss is devastating and so are the mental wounds from these platitudes. Discounting statements like "at least..." hurt because nothing is going to make this situation okay. Instead, simply acknowledge the loss and express your sadness at the pain they are going through.
5. DON'T be vague. "Call me if there's anything I can do" is practically useless. They're not going to call; they're too overwhelmed and too upset to even remember the offer. To Someone in the immediacy of a trauma, the phone weighs 2,000 pounds and is simply too heavy to pick up for any reason, including asking for help.
6. DO be specific. Tell your friend; "I'm cooking dinner at your house on Thursday at 6 p.m." The smells of cooking can be extremely comforting and calming. Offer to pick up friends or relative from the airport. Take the kids to school or babysit after school. Vacuum their house. Take their trash to the curb on trash day. Imagine what you would least like to do in their situation – then volunteer to do it for them.
7. DON'T bring by a lasagna. People under extreme duress do not eat meals, they snack. Bring fresh fruit, vegetables, cheese and crackers – foods that you can eat with your fingers that don't require cooking or clean up. Stress shuts down the digestive system. Heavy meals that require prep and clean up just add to the stress.
8. DO bring essentials. The three things that people most need immediately after a death or trauma are tissues and water. Water bottles eliminate the need for cups and clean up. More people means more bathroom visits so the need for more toilet paper becomes essential.
9. DO be human. If you see this person at the grocery store, don't duck behind the soup display because you can't think of anything to say. This just makes the person feel alienated and lonely. Acknowledge what happened by saying something like, "I'm so sorry this happened." You don't have to save them or provide a counseling session. They might want to talk, they might not. Your pack of comfort will only make them feel more alienated. A simple hug goes a long way.
10. DON'T judge. No matter what your feelings about the situation, use neutral language, "I remember Mike's smile. He was also so helpful to us. I'm sorry. How are you doing?" in fact, a simple "How are you doing?" can go a long way. These situations are uncomfortable – for everyone. But with a little thought we can avoid increasing the hurt and even help when the worst happens to people we know.

HOW TO DISPOSE OF UNUSED AND UNWANTED MEDICATIONS

Follow Instructions on the Bottle/Packaging

- Look for drug disposal instructions on the bottle.
- The label may say you can dispose the medicine in the trash, crush the medicines and combine and mix them in a substance or you can flush them down the toilet.

Medicine Take-Back Programs

- Contact your city or county government's household trash and recycling service to see if there is a medicine take-back program in your city.
- Go to www.deadiversion.usdoj.gov to find a National Prescription Drug Take Back Days in your area.
- Call your pharmacist to see if they have or know of a medicine disposal program.

Crushing Prescriptions to Throw-Away

- Take the medicines out of their original container – crush them and then mix them with coffee grounds or kitty litter.
- Put this in a sealable bag, empty can or another container to prevent leaking or breaking of a garbage bag.
- Scratch off all identifying information on the medication bottles for your own privacy and health information.

Additional Questions and Information

- Call 1-888-INFO-FDA (1-888-463-6332)
- Visit <http://www.fda.gov/ForConsumers/ConsumerUpdates/ucm101653.htm>

DEALING WITH THE MEDIA

If you have been involved in an incident of public interest, you may encounter the media. It is important that you know your rights and know that you have a choice regarding sharing the details and/or feelings with the general public. You do not have an obligation to speak with the media, however if you do, you may find the following information helpful.

YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO:

- Say "NO" to an interview.
- Select the spokesperson or advocate of your choice.
- Select the time and location for media interviews.
- Request a specific reporter.
- Refuse an interview with a specific reporter even though you have granted interviews to other reporters.
- Say "NO" to an interview even though you previously granted interviews.
- Release a written statement through a spokesperson in lieu of an interview.
- Exclude children from interviews.
- Refrain from answering any questions with which you are uncomfortable or feel are inappropriate.
- Know in advance what direction the story about your victimization is going to take.
- Ask for a review of your quotations in a story line prior to publication.
- Avoid a press conference atmosphere and speak to only one reporter at a time.
- Demand a retraction when inaccurate information is reported.
- Ask that offensive photographs or visuals be omitted from airing or publication.
- Conduct a television interview using a silhouette or a newspaper interview without having your photograph taken.
- Give your complete side of the story related to your victimization.
- Refrain from answering reporter's questions during trial.
- File a formal complaint against a reporter.
- Grieve in privacy.
- Suggest training about media and victims for print and electronic media in your community.
- Be treated with dignity and respect by the media.

NOTES

THINGS TO CONSIDER WHEN CHOOSING A SERVICE PROVIDER

It's okay to not know what you want. Thinking about the items below can help direct you to the proper funeral service provider. Here are a few initial questions you may want to ask.

FIRST THOUGHTS

- What type of service do you need (or want): Burial or Cremation?
- Do you want to have a visitation?
- Are there charges for viewing?
- Is the location of the viewing at the funeral home?
- Do you want to have a service? Is there a place for the service?

LOCATION

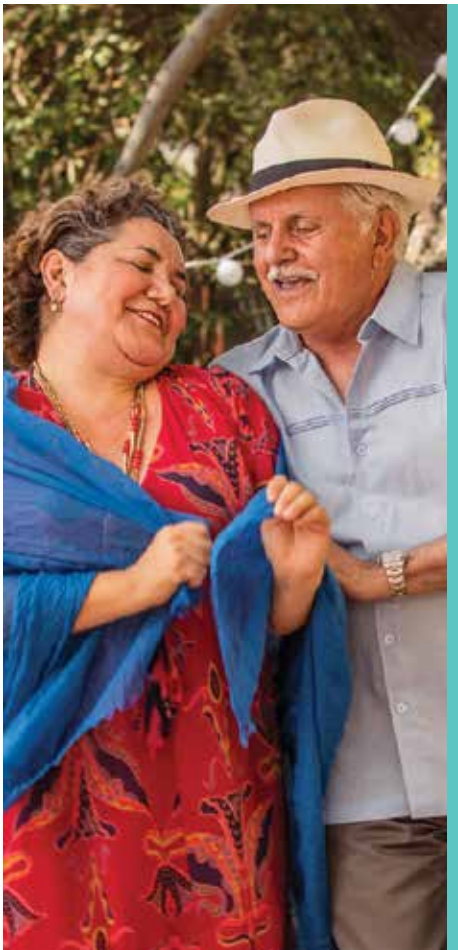

- This is important. Consider that you may have to go to the funeral home several times.
- What is the distance to the funeral home?
- Are there charges for transportation of the body? After hours?

BURIAL

- What does the burial package include?
- What is the price range of caskets?
- Are death certificates included?

CREMATION

- What does your cremation package include?
- What is the cost of the cremation container?
- Are death certificates included?

Lock in prices today to protect your loved ones tomorrow.

Paying for your final arrangements in advance protects you against rising costs and provides valuable peace of mind.

Organ, Tissue, & Body Donations

LIFESHARING

lifesharing.org | (619) 543-7225

Lifesharing is the federally designated organ procurement organization (OPO) serving San Diego and Imperial Counties in Southern California. As an OPO, we coordinate organ and tissue donation at the end of a person's life. Our team provides compassionate support to families as we carry out their loved one's donation. With the help of local families, we transplant hundreds of vital organs each year -- including hearts, lungs, livers and kidneys. In 2022, Lifesharing organ donors saved a record 437 lives. We are humbled to serve this community and committed to honoring all those who give the gift of life.

SCIENCE CARE

Sciencecare.com | (800) 417-3747

The Science Care program strives to help meet the needs of the medical community while fulfilling your wishes and making the process simple and helpful for your family members. Making a whole body donation is one of the most compassionate funeral alternatives available. When you donate your body to science, Science Care can eliminate and cover all of the costs in addition to the many other benefits to society. With the rising costs of living and final arrangements, whole body donation can be a real blessing not only for medical researchers but for family members.

Whole Body Donation Benefits Include:

- Honoring your wish to leave a lasting legacy for future generations
- Free cremation and transportation from the location of passing
- A simple process; pre-registration is not required to donate
- Filing of the death certificate
- Return of cremated remains in 3-5 weeks
- Letter after donation updating family members on current research projects and the impact your donation has made to society
- Memorial tree planting at the one-year anniversary of donation through our Memory in Nature program supporting forests in need in partnership with the Arbor Day Foundation

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, SAN DIEGO BODY DONATION PROGRAM

bodydonation.ucsd.edu | (858) 534-4536

The Body Donation Program at the University of California, San Diego is committed to excellence in research and education. While the primary focus of the Program is to obtain the human cadaver for educational and scientific study, we strive to administer the BDP in a way consistent with the spirit of the good physician. In our contact with donors registering with the BDP or with the families of the donor, we provide service that is compassionate as well as competent.

As you consider the option of donating your body to science, know that the need is great, and that your gift will be valued and honored.

Your donation will play a critical role in helping UC San Diego medical students to master the complex anatomy of the human body and will provide researchers with the essential tools to help our patients of tomorrow.
